EDWARD GOTTLIEB TROPHY

The Edward Gottlieb Trophy was established in 1965 to honor the man who some call "Mr. Warrior," to be presented to the player making the greatest contribution to the team during the season.

The perpetual award is in recognition of Eddie Gottlieb's forty years as one of the founding fathers of the N.B.A. and as a former player, coach and owner. He was one of the important figures in founding the N.B.A. and filled the shoes of coach and owner of the Philadelphia Warriors in 1946 and 1947, the first year of the N.B.A.

During his nine years as the coach of the Warriors, he finished in first place three times and second once. In 1955 he stepped down as coach to take over full-time administrative duties with the Warriors and came West with the club when the franchise moved to San Francisco in 1962. The winner of the beautiful four-foot perpetual trophy is decided by a vote of the team's most knowledgeable fans - season ticket holders, press, radio and television personnel. The winner is also presented with a miniature replica of his own and $1000.

"The Warriors will always be part of Eddie Gottlieb and Eddie Gottlieb will always be part of the Warriors," said Franklin Mieuli, President of the San Francisco Warriors when discussing the man who did so much for the Warriors and the N.B.A.

COACH GEORGE LEE

In 1964, Lee was named player-assistant coach by the Warriors and held that post until last year when he took over complete duties as full time assistant coach.

At the conclusion of the 1967-68 campaign, after learning the basketball philosophies of four coaches with definite but opposite ideas, George was handed the head coaching job by the club.

"I have either played for or worked with four different coaches during my career in the NBA," Lee states. "Each man had a firm idea on how the game was to be played. I feel that I have learned a great deal and I hope that I have taken the best of each man's philosophy with me.

"During that time I have also formed my own ideas. The combination of what I have learned and my own thoughts on the game will be the basis of my coaching program."

Lee, at 32 years of age, becomes one of the youngest coaches to participate in the NBA. Before being named, the Warriors' management knew that someday he would be the team's coach, but, was he ready now?

Within hours, telegrams, phone calls and personal visits from members of last years team bombarded the Warriors office in a unanimous vote of confidence.

The men who knew the demands of the job best, the men who would have to work under his leadership, the veteran basketball experts, the Rudy LaRussos, the Nate Thurmonds, unanimously were heard in a resounding demonstration for George Lee. The players had selected their next coach.

ASSISTANT COACH AL ATTLES

The day that George Lee was named coach of the San Francisco Warriors he met with Franklin Mieuli. "My first request as coach of the Warriors was," Lee stated, "I want Alvin as my assistant." Within minutes a phone call was placed and Al Attles became the Warriors new assistant coach. Although he will continue as a player, Al will be working with Lee during the training camp to teach the rookies about the NBA. He will work individually with each player as much as possible and will be called upon from time to time to take over full coaching duties when Lee is scouting college talent for the following season. The combination of Lee and Attles gives the Warriors a new, young and exciting coaching duo that will be fighting to regain the Western Division Championship for The City.

PRESIDENT
FRANKLIN MIEULI

The title on his office door reads "Franklin Mieuli and Associates." It's rather encompassing title, one which embraces almost all of San Francisco and much of the United States.

Sports fans think of Franklin Mieuli in terms of his association with the Warriors – since 1962, the 49ers and the Giants. To others he is known as a radio and television producer – "San Francisco's czar of sportscasting," a broadcast consultant, a public relations man and a free-thinking individual who respects tradition but won't become its slave.

Despite such a diversity of interests, his devotion to each is immense. Never has this been more clearly illustrated than in the case of the San Francisco Warriors whom he serves as President and Chairman of the Board.

The vast knowledge gained through his association with the Giants and 49ers has been put to good use. Mieuli knows that it takes more than a group of players and a ball to operate a professional franchise. It takes long hours of work, much imagination and a pioneering spirit among other things. Thus Warrior fans are liable to see, in addition to good basketball, such extra added attractions as Black Tie dinners, something new in uniforms and a "Stadium Club" atmosphere at games.

GENERAL MANAGER
ROBERT J. FEERICK

Few men have been as closely identified with Bay Area basketball as Warrior General Manager Bob Feerick. As both a collegian and professional, Feerick has gained the respect of basketball people throughout the country. Knowing the game as he does from his prior roles as a player and coach Bob is well qualified for his current capacity as General Manager. Local fans will recall Bob from his college days when he starred for Santa Clara from 1937-41. Following a four-year stint with the NBA Washington Capitols Bob returned to his alma mater in the fall of 1950 where he coached the Broncos for the next 12 seasons. During this period his clubs totaled 193 wins against 118 losses and on two occasions led the nation in defense. In addition Bob served the Washington club as a player-coach during the 49-50 campaign. When NBA basketball came to San Francisco in 1962, significantly it was Bob Feerick who was selected as the club's first coach. From there it was a natural step to his present role as General Manager.

NOTE • NOTE
NEW TIP-OFF TIME

The San Francisco Warriors will have major changes this season starting right from the opening tip off. Beginning this year, all Warriors games (except Sun.) will begin at 8:00 p.m., one half hour earlier. This will enable the fans to enjoy an exciting evening with the San Francisco Warriors and then dine at one of the many exciting restaurants that the city has to offer.

"T" SHIRT BASKETBALL NITES

Once again the San Francisco Warriors will offer special nights to their young fans. "T" Shirt Nite will feature the special "City" "T" shirt with an exact emblem that is worn on the team's uniform. Basketball Night will feature the popular Warriors basketball. At each night every youngster who attends will receive either a free "T" shirt of basketball as he or she enters the arena. Listen to Bill King and Hank Greenwald on radio and T.V. for the announcement of dates.

AL ATTLES

Height 6-0

Weight 180

College
North Carolina A&T

Years in Pro 8

Avg. 1967-68 . . . . . 9.8

Avg. Lifetime 9.7

Taking on the double duty of player-assistant coach, Al will still be the team's number one defensive backcourt specialist. Considered by many as the best defensive guard in the NBA today, Al has made a career of harassing the likes of Oscar Robertson, Hal Greer and Jerry West. Last season he became one of the best assist men in the league, ranking seventh, by connecting with a teammate 390 times. Probably the most sensation aspect of Al's game is his blinding speed and driving ability that neither man nor arena wall has been able to stop. Al is noted for his lack of self-regard when driving to the hoop or driving across the court to retrieve a loose ball or intercept an errant enemy pass. The last of the original Warriors, Al played on the 1962 San Francisco Warriors team. In the first game ever played in the city, on Oct. 23, 1962, Al scored 10 points while hitting for eight assists. Listed at 6-0, Al is the smallest member of the team. Despite his size, he is the team's third highest all-time rebounder behind Rudy LaRusso (6-7) and Nate Thurmond (6-10). Over an eight year career he has pulled down 2,172 rebounds and that's a lot of times to battle the likes of Wilt Chamberlain, Bill Russell, Jerry Lucas to name just a few. After being named coach of the Warriors, Al decided to move his family to California after making his off-season residence in Newark, New Jersey. Now that Attles has moved to the Bay Area, every member of the Warriors' roster who played last year (except Rudy LaRusso) makes the Bay Area his year 'round home.

JOE ELLIS

Height 6-6

Years in Pro 2

1967-68 Avg. 5.0

Lifetime Avg. 4.4

Leaping Joe Ellis has been waiting, and he hopes that this will be the year that he gets his chance to prove he can be a star in the National Basketball Association. Last season he doubled his playing time and his scoring average over his rookie campaign. Every time it appeared that he was ready to take a position in the starting lineup, however, an injury forced him to the sidelines. After his rookie campaign, Army duty caused him to miss the off-season training but this summer Joe spent many long hours on the hardwoods perfecting his shooting ability and quickness. Noted for his outside jump shot that has little or no arch, Ellis is sometimes criticized for taking a shot that could be blocked. But those who would profess this theory forget the tremendous leaping ability of the 6-6 former U.S.F. great. Although guarded by a taller opponent, Joe is able to leap high above any hand that would try to block his attempt. In 51 appearances last season, Ellis averaged just 12 minutes of play per game, however, he averaged almost four rebounds per contest or one every three minutes of action. With the Warriors this season he will see a lot of action as both guard and forward. His height will be of great defensive value while playing the backcourt and his speed and quickness will create problems for the larger, more cumbersome opposing forwards. With Joe in the line-up, the Warriors will increase their speed and therefore play a more wide open, fast break style of offense. One of the most popular of the San Francisco Warriors, Joe is the team's only local product this year, playing his college ball at the University of San Francisco. In his final season at USF, Joe led the team in rebounding and was second in scoring.

JIM KING

Height 6-2

Weight 175

College . . . . . Tulsa

Years in Pro 5

Avg. 1967-68 . . . . . 16.6

Avg. Lifetime 8.9

The biggest question mark for the San Francisco Warriors this year is Jim King. At the start of last year he was the leading scorer in the National Basketball Association, but a groin injury sidelined the backcourt ace for most of the remaining season and the playoffs. A summer of complete rest was prescribed and then a slow process of rehabilitation. The exact date of his return to the lineup has not been announced although Coach George Lee is hoping that the 6-2 Tulsa grad will be available for duty when the whistle blows on the opening day of the season. Jim began his pro career with the Los Angeles Lakers and played for the West-Baylor led Southerners for three seasons. He joined the Warriors two years ago and was given a starting berth with the blue and gold—plus one set of instructions. "Forget Elgin Baylor and Jerry West. With the Warriors YOU are the one that is going to shoot." With this in mind he became one of the teams most feared offensive threats and during his first season with the Warriors he doubled his lifetime scoring average. Before his injury last year he had nearly doubled it again, an almost unbelievable performance. In three years his per game scoring average jumped from six points per game to 11 points to 21 points in mid December of last season. One of the most important roles that Jim plays with the Warriors is that of team quarterback. While on the court he directs the action with the same finesse as he takes a 15 foot jump shot. His quick hands and speed enable him to steal enemy passes and turn them into points for the Warriors. The Warriors are hoping for a swift recovery and return to the Warriors lineup for Jim King because his presence in the lineup will make the team's recapture of the Western Division Title a much easier task.

RUDY LARUSSO

Height 6-8

Weight 220

College . . . . . Dartmouth

Years in Pro 9

Avg. 1967-68 . . . . . 21.8

Avg. Lifetime 15.0

Throughout the years, sports have been colorfully sprinkled with amazing comebacks. Last year, San Francisco fans were treated to the amazing success story twice in two different sports. In baseball, Mike McCormick returned to the Giants, apparently at the low ebb of his career only to become one of the best pitchers in the National League. In basketball, Rudy LaRusso changed his mind about retirement after being obtained by the San Francisco Warriors, and ended up being named to the Western Division All-Star team. After eight seasons with the Los Angeles Lakers, Rudy decided to call it quits and settled down in southern California to pursue a career as a stock broker. During the summer, however, the Warriors obtained the rights to Rudy and he decided to return to the NBA. With the Lakers, as is the history with many players on the Los Angeles club, his potential was never realized. The presence of Elgin Baylor and Jerry West overshadowed the other men on the team. It was only after he joined the Warriors that Rudy reached the height of his career. After eight seasons and at the age of 30, LaRusso played more minutes, hit more field goals and free throws, grabbed more rebounds and scored more points than in any other season of his career. His 21.8 points per game average was the best on the team and his 552 free throws was the third highest in the history of the club. One of the truly hardnosed players in the league, Rudy battles every minute he is in the game giving the Warriors scoring, rebounding and defense. Standing 6-8, Rudy entered the NBA nine years ago as one of the bigger forwards in the league. Today, he matches his size against opponents standing 6-10 and 6-11 and weighing in 30 pounds heavier. A year older, Rudy will once again be matching his hustle and keen knowledge of the game to lead the Warriors back to the Western Division crown.

CLYDE LEE

Height 6-10

Weight 215

College . . . . . Vanderbilt

Years in Pro 2

Avg. 1967-68 . . . . . 11.9

Avg. Lifetime 9.6

For the past two years, Clyde Lee has been called upon to play one position during the first half of the season and then make an adjustment and play another during the second portion of the year. At 6-10, Clyde was drafted as a forward by the Warriors two years ago and has opened the season in the corner ever since joining the pro ranks. But untimely injuries to Nate Thurmond pushed the Vanderbilt grad into the pivot where he had to relearn a new position at mid season. Two years ago his play surprised even the most optimistic viewer of the game as he rallied the team behind him and continued their thrust that carried them to the Western Division Championship. Last year he improved upon his rookie season performance. Averaging 11.9 points per game, Clyde grabbed 1,141 rebounds, highest on the team and fourth best in the NBA behind only Wilt Chamberlain, Jerry Lucas and Bill Russell. Weighing in at 205 pounds, his thin and somewhat fragile appearance proved deceptive as he was the only player on the club to see action in all 82 regular league games. At the start of the 1968-69 season, he has seen action in 97 consecutive games, the longest streak on the team. The most valuable experience that any player can gain is from actual game conditions and during the last two campaigns Clyde has played 3,946 minutes at center and forward. This year he will be called upon to return to the corner but will also see action in the pivot to give Thurmond as much rest as possible. The combination of Nate Thurmond, Rudy LaRusso and Lee in the frontcourt should once again make the Warriors contenders for the team rebounding leadership. During the off season, Lee underwent a personal program to gain weight and hopes to play this season about 10 pounds heavier than his previous two years. Combined with his speed and quickness, the added weight will pose a serious threat to opponents who hope to take advantage of the slim boy from Tennessee.

BOB LEWIS

Height 6.3

Weight 185

College . . . . . N. Carolina

Years in Pro 1

Avg. 1967-68 . . . . . 4.4

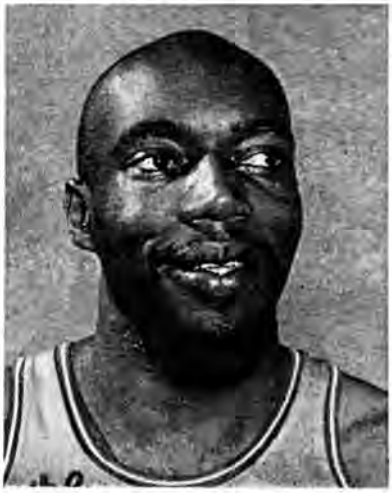
Avg. Lifetime 4.4

Even a veteran of ten years, when looking back over his career, will probably point to his rookie season as the period of time in which he learned the most about basketball. Bob Lewis now has his premiere campaign behind him and with it a season of intense learning. During the first half of the 1967-68 season, Bob spend many hours on the basketball court, most of them practicing. Under the personal direction of George Lee and Al Attles, he learned the finer points of playing the backcourt against the likes of Jerry West and Oscar Robertson. He learned how to shoot quicker, he sharpened his defense and polished his ball handling. In mid February, Bob had seen just over 100 minutes of actual NBA playing time but his previous months of work and dedication were about to be realized. During a 12 game period he tripled his minutes played, doubled his scoring average, hit 23 points in one game, connected on 16 of 32 field goal attempts during a three game span and was good on 35 of 41 free throws for an 85 percentage. During the summer, Bob returned to the practice court. Once again under the watchful eye of Lee and Attles, he continued to develop and at the start of the 1968-69 season was ready to challenge the teams veteran backcourt for a starting berth. He was the only rookie guard to make the team last year and he showed the desire and talent to become one of the established veterans in the NBA who will someday look back on their career and point to their rookie season as the one in which they learned the most about basketball.

JEFF MULLINS

Height	6-4
Weight	200
College	Duke
Years in Pro	4
Avg. 1967-68	18.9
Avg. Lifetime	12.1

After just four years in the NBA, Jeff Mullins has had a career of extreme contrasts. During his first two campaigns, both with the St. Louis Hawks, Jeff averaged 4.9 and 5.8 points per game respectively. During his two seasons with the San Francisco Warriors, he has posted per game averages of 12.9 and 18.9. After finishing a brilliant career at Duke, Jeff joined the United States Olympic team. At the conclusion of the games, he reported to the Hawks and began a two year period of frustration. In his attempt to earn a berth on a team that posed one of the deepest backcourts in the league at that time, he had to fight off a series of minor injuries that kept him inactive off and on throughout each season. Finally the Hawks decided that Jeff was not going to become a star in the league and eventually he ended up in the uniform of "The City." During the first month of his first season with the Warriors he averaged eight points per game, high compared to his previous standards, but just the beginning of a brilliant career. At the end of the 1966-67 season he had raised that norm to 14 points per game and during the playoffs he hit for 20 points per game. In those playoffs, it was Jeff who almost single handedly destroyed the Hawks with games of 40, 26, 26 and 20 points. Last year, he picked up where he left off during the 1967 playoffs and his point total was second best on the club. During last season's playoffs, he averaged 25.1 points per game and against the Hawks, hit for 27 counters per contest while hitting at a fantastic 53 percent field goal percentage. Last year he hit for 351 assists, second on the team, and his 447 rebounds were tops among Warriors guards.



NATE THURMOND

Height 6-11

Weight 220

College . . . Bowling Green

Years in Pro 5

Avg. 1967-68 . . . . . 20.5

Avg. Lifetime 15.3

Never in the history of the San Francisco Warriors and seldom in the pages of professional sports has one man been plagued by the history of injuries that has followed Nate Thurmond. Since becoming the teams pivot man in 1965, Nate has experienced four consecutive seasons of disappointing setbacks. Two months after assuming center duties in the closing weeks of the 1965 season, "The Great" strained muscles in his back and was forced to the sidelines for the remainder of the campaign. The following year, back muscles again removed the 6-11 star from the lineup during the closing weeks of the season. After extensive medical treatment and physical therapy, Nate started the 1967 season with a clean bill of health. After leading the club to a substantial margin in the Western Division, a broken hand once again removed him from the active list. He returned, his mending hand rendered almost useless by a confining cast, for the playoffs and helped lead the Warriors to the sixth game in the world's championship. Last year, with the Warriors charging once again to retain their Western Division title, Thurmond's career was stymied by torn ligaments in his right knee. A summer of special therapy has returned the battling veteran to the Warriors in top condition. This year Nate hopes will be a new beginning. Despite his injuries he has been named to the Western Division All-Star team the last four years and to the starting team the last three seasons. Although missing between 20 and 30 games each of the last four years, Nate has always finished in the top ten in rebounding. At the time of his injury he had never been lower than third in the league in rebounding and last year he was leading the league. While in the line-up last year, he was the team's top scorer. Considered by many as the best defensive center in the league today, he is certainly among the top two. Possibly with a full year of play, his ability to block shots and disturb the opponents' efforts in the region of the basket will make him the uncontested defensive king in the NBA.

BILL TURNER

Height 6-7

Weight 220

College . . . . . Akron

Years in Pro 1

Avg. 1967-68 . . . . . 4.1

Avg. Lifetime 4.1

Last season's number two draft pick, came to the attention of the Warriors on the recommendation of Nate Thurmond. A graduate of Akron University, Nate's home town, Turner had played against the Warriors' star and had impressed him. Before leaving to attend the 1967 draft meeting, Thurmond suggested to George Lee that if available, Turner had great potential. On Thurmond's advice, the Warriors did tab him and today are very happy they did. Beginning his second season in the pro ranks, Bill goes to training camp with a very definite chance of winning a starting berth on this year's team. As is the case with most rookies coming into the NBA, Bill had a tremendous adjustment to make his first season. Seeing very little action during the opening weeks of the campaign, Turner started to see more playing time after the All-Star break, averaging over 20 minutes per game. At the All-Star break Bill's scoring average was 2.0 per game, but during the remainder of the season he scored at a 6.3 per game norm. Blessed with great jumping ability, he has a good outside shot to go with his rebounding under the hoop. In his rookie season he hit 43 per cent of his field goal attempts. At Akron the year before, Bill was good on 87 percent of his free throw attempts, another indication that he is a good shooter. After a summer of preparation, Bill reported to the Warriors training camp prepared to be an important member of the 1968-69 team.

SAN FRANCISCO WARRIORS 1968 ROOKIES

RON WILLIAMS

Ron "Fritz" Williams could become the surprise rookie of the NBA this season. Although drafted number one by the San Francisco Warriors, he wasn't selected until ninth in the country. First came the Elvin Hayes' and Westley Unseld's. But the 6-3 guard from West Virginia was the first backcourt man selected and super star Dave Bing of Detroit stated that Williams could well be the sleeper of this year's draft. A superb ball handler, Fritz possesses an accurate jump shot from the perimeters. The most heralded player to come out of West Virginia since Hot Rod Hundley, Rod Thorn and Jerry West, Fritz seems to be equipped with all the tools needed to become a star in the NBA.

BOB ALLEN

Another West Virginia rookie, Bob went to Marshall College and came to the Warriors during the college draft session at the end of the 1967-68 season. A corner man, he is described as a hardnosed ball player by Coach George Lee who scouted him last season. A rugged rebounder, Allen will add a lot of muscle under the boards for the Warriors and will prove to be a strong defensive addition to "The City's" squad. Offensively, Bob is most dangerous under the basket where he uses his size and strength to grab rebounds and follow up missed shots.

DALE SCHLEUDER

Dale may be setting a new NBA record this season if such records are kept. For the second year in a row, he will be a rookie. Last season the 6-10 forward from Colorado, was drafted by the Warriors and reported for the team's tryout camp in San Jose. He suffered a shoulder separation, however, and was sidelined for the rest of the season. After his injury healed, Dale worked out with the team and has spent the summer practicing. At Colorado he played both center and forward and may be called upon to give Nate Thurmond needed rest during the season although he will be primarily a forward. At 6-10, Dale will be one of the biggest forwards in the league and with Thurmond, Lee and Schlueter in the line-up, the Warriors should present the tallest frontcourts in pro basketball today.

Maurice Stokes Benefit Game
Annual Event

Every summer for the last nine years, the leading stars in the National Basketball Association participate in the all-star game at Monticello, N. Y., with the entire proceeds of the event going toward paying the medical expenses of Maurice Stokes, one-time Cincinnati Royals' star who has been bedridden since March 14, 1958, with a brain injury. As a result of his improvement, Stokes was able to attend the 1966 content in a wheelchair. In the first eight years of this mid-summer event a total of over $50,000 was raised.
